Chatham House Rule

On/Off Record and Chatham House Rule

There are sessions that are open to the reporting press. These sessions are identified in programme.

For all other sessions, which are not open to the reporting press, please note that the Chatham House Rule applies:

When a meeting, or part thereof, is held under the Chatham House Rule, participants are free to use the information received, but neither the identity nor the affiliation of the speaker(s), nor that of any participant, may be revealed.

The rule originated at Chatham House with the aim of providing anonymity to speakers and encouraging openness and sharing of information. It is now used throughout the world as an aid to free discussion.

If you would like to quote a participant in an off-the-record session, you must get the clear and unambiguous agreement of the participant to be quoted.

The same rule applies to blogging, tweeting, videoblogging and podcasting of sessions. To encourage free-flowing debate, bloggers and twitterati are asked not to identify speakers in off-the-record sessions without their explicit permission.

Society: Solutions for Sustainable Social Structures

Japan is undergoing a major demographic shift due to low fertility rates and an ageing population. With the emergence of new social challenges tied to labour markets, society security spending, mounting government debt, gender inequality, demographic shifts and immigration, Japan needs a more efficient, inclusive and sustainable social structure. Participants will discuss how best to build a sustainable society.

Dimensions to be addressed:

- Exploring policy solutions to tackle an ageing society and sustainable health system
- Leveraging the role of business to adjust to create more sustainable social structure
- Understanding the impact demographic changes will have on society and its governance

Beyond Boundaries

As technology advancements continue to diminish boundaries and challenges become more global in scope, it is becoming increasingly important for teams, regardless of industries, regional or generational frameworks, to be multidisciplinary and collaborative. At the same time, since young people tend to adopt new technologies more easily, a technology gap between the younger and senior generations has become more apparent and will continue to widen. To improve the state of the world for a better future, we need a new collaboration framework that can accommodate both generations.

This session will invite both young and senior leaders from academia, media, business and politics to discuss issues such as:

- How can we go beyond traditional boundaries in today's world?
- How can young and older generations work together to improve the state of the world?
- What does it mean to be successful in today's society?

Japan and Global Food Security

- Shape the Role of Japan on the Future Global Imbalance of the Food -

By 2050, the global population will surpass 9 billion and demand for agricultural products is expected to double. The world's agricultural systems will be increasingly challenged by water scarcity, climate change and volatility, raising the risk of production shortfalls in a world where nearly 1 billion people are already hungry or malnourished. To a country such as Japan, which has a 39% food self-sufficiency rate, food security is a critical issue to be reckoned with.

Substantial gains can be achieved in the productivity, environmental sustainability, nutritional and economic benefits of the world's agriculture systems. However, realizing these gains will require an exceptional level of innovation and new types of collaboration among the public and private sectors, civil society, farmers and other key stakeholders.

With Global leaders in Japan across sectors and generations, this private session will explore the role of Japan in tackling this global issue and outline priority actions moving forward.

Objectives:

- 1) To establish a common understanding on global food security issue.
- 2) To recognize the role of Japan in this global context
- 3) To identify initial actions to tackle this issue

Global Shapers around the World

(Video connection with Shapers around the world)

In the age of social media, we are equipped with various tools to connect with the world, and this has considerably diminished traditional borders. Yet at the same time, we are still facing critical gaps in our society; youth unemployment remains high, female participation rate in the workforce remains at a dismal level in some countries, and environment is often forsaken in the name of economic growth. Looking back at the past two years since the launch of Global Shapers Community, this discussion will focus on what have we achieved, where do we stand today and to which direction are we heading?

- What have been the obstacles to achieve GSC's goal to shape a better future, and how have we endeavoured to overcome those challenges?
- How can we create a more sustainable, innovative and inclusive society?
- How can Shapers utilize our global network more to address local challenges?
- How can we enhance inter-hub connectiveness to better achieve our goals?
